Tea Selection

BLACK TEA

Black Tea is roll broken after withering; there is no steaming as the enzymes need to remain active. Roll breaking cracks the surface of the leaf exposing the leaf's enzymes to oxygen initiating oxidation. Oxidation is the process that results in the flavour profiles of Oolong & Black tea.

WHITE TEA

White Tea is made with leaves that are processed in a manner to let them wilt slightly and lose the 'grassy' taste of most Green tea, while undergoing minimal oxidation. The buds and leaves used in White tea are often younger, resulting in a higher amount of caffeine than Green teas. Enjoy some of this healthy, original blend from the Chinese province of Fujian.

Cake Walk (O, FT)

Ginger

So let's imagine the White Tea is Fred, paired with Ginger we present a smooth, effortless, elegant cup that is certain to be a classic. Gentle nuttiness with just a hint of heat. #33

This blend will reawaken you from a sweet mid-day slumber. Fill your cup & pucker up. #35

PU-ERH TEA

Pu-erh can be made from Black or Green tea. Moisture is introduced to the dry, finished leaf to encourage decomposition over time. Pu-erh was traditionally aged in caves, although now it is usually buried underground. Aging is desirable as is the earthy aroma, fragrance and taste.

MASALA CHAI

Masala Chai is a blend from the content of India. It is made by brewing a mixture of aromatic Indian spices and herbs. Chai is made by simmering or boiling a mixture of water with loose leaf tea, and a variety of spices. Popular to North America is a 'cold' chai.

Cinnamon, Cloves, Cardamom, Ginger, Pepper & Organic Black

This Award-Winning Masala Chai recipe is rich, warming & generous. This tea was designed to complement milk & is good enough to stand alone. #37

OOLONG

Oolong Tea is basket tossed after withering. There is no steaming, as the enzymes need to remain active. Basket tossing bruises the edges and exposes the leaf's enzymes to oxygen initiating oxidation. Oxidation is the process that results in the flavour profiles of Oolong & Black tea. After partial oxidation occurs, the leaf is then pan fried.

Cotillion

Rose Petals

A sweet innocence suggested by pretty rose petals offset by the maturity of Oolong. #38

White Tip Oolong
